ROMANCE OF THE ANTARCTIC. HISTORY OF EXPLORATION. THE MARCH OF SCIENCE.

"Antarctica" was the subject of a very interesting paper read at the University yesterday, in connection with the Science lectures, by Dr. Mawson, who was member of the expedition, and who proposed to lead an Australian expedition to the Antarctic regions at the end of the present year.

Dr. Mawson began by tracing the history of the gradual spread of knowledge concerning Antarctica. Over a map showing the Antarctic regions as they are known to-day he had tucked a sheet of paper perforated in sections, and as he read from it he was making a map of the continent, revealing the new-found strip of sea or land, as the case might be.

Dr. Mawson then turned to the early beliefs and discoveries. "The belief in a vast southern land," he said, "extending over a large area, now known to be ocean, grew stronger during the 16th century, owing to the false and unwarranted reports of Portuguese and Spanish navigators."
